There was once a jungle filled with delicious food and fresh water. In this jungle there lived a mean lion. Every day he would eat whatever animals he could catch. He showed no mercy on them.

The animals of the jungle were so afraid of the lion that they couldn't even come out of their nests and dens. They couldn't get any fruit to eat. They couldn't even get water to drink. Every morning they woke up in fear.

"I wonder which one of us the lion will catch today?" they thought. "Which one of us will he eat?"

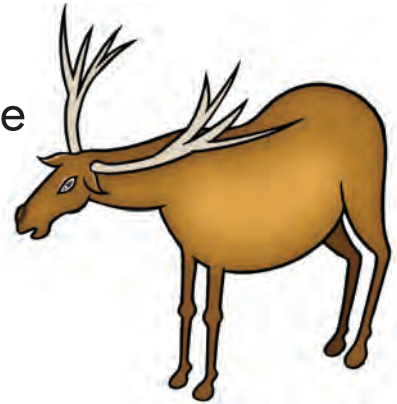

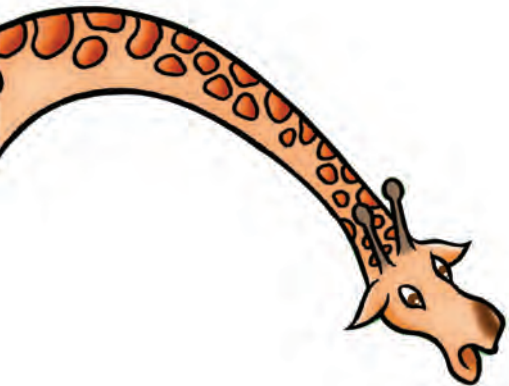

One day the animals of the jungle came together. They began to talk with one another.

“We can’t live this way. We must do something,” the gazelle said.

“We are always hungry. We can’t even go to the lake to drink.” The deer said, pouring out her troubles.

“We’re tired of living in fear,” the giraffe added.

All of them were very sad. However, none of them were strong enough to face the lion.
