CAWCAW THE CROW

Once upon a time, there were many kinds of birds living in the green forest. There were crows, pigeons, doves, sparrows and many others. These birds left their nests after the rain and took a bath in the pools of water.

They played games and got rid of the dust and dirt on their wings. They would all have a great time.

But one of them didn't like to take baths. This bird was the baby Cawcaw the Crow. Whenever his friends called him to take a bath, he would say, "I won't come, I don't want to take a bath."

Even though his friends insisted, he always resisted taking a bath. After some time, Cawcaw the Crow got so dirty that while he was flying, a bad smell started to spread around.

One day, his mother wanted Cawcaw to call the neighbors and tell them that she is inviting them over the next day. Cawcaw left to tell them.

At that time, Mrs. Clean the pigeon was hanging clothes on the balcony. Suddenly a bad smell came to her nose. She was thinking, "where is this bad smell coming from?" Then she saw Cawcaw.
