Once upon a time, there was a good-hearted deaf man living in a city. One day a friend came to see the deaf man. The friend told him that a person in the neighborhood was very sick.

When the deaf man found out about this, he wanted to visit his neighbor. "My neighbor is sick," he thought to himself. "I would go and see how he is feeling, but I can't hear. I won't understand what my neighbor tells me. Ya Allah! What should I do?"

Finally the deaf man thought of what he could do.

"I'll say to my neighbor: 'How are you?' He'll answer: 'I'm starting to feel better.' Then I'll say to him: 'Thank God! What have you eaten?' Then he'll tell me a kind of soup. I'll say: 'I'm sure it was delicious.' Then I'll ask: 'Which doctor is treating you?' He'll then say the name of the doctor. I'll say: 'O he's a good doctor. It's good that you called him.'"
