Today is a very special day for Burcu. Her father, Mr. Kaya, bought her and Alper each a bicycle. Burcu's is a colorful bike with a purple basket.

Burcu really likes her bicycle. She named it Wind. She imagines that she flies like the wind with her bicycle.

However, there is a small problem. Burcu doesn't know how to ride a bicycle yet. Her brother, Alper learned earlier from his uncle though. Let's see what Burcu will experience in our story!

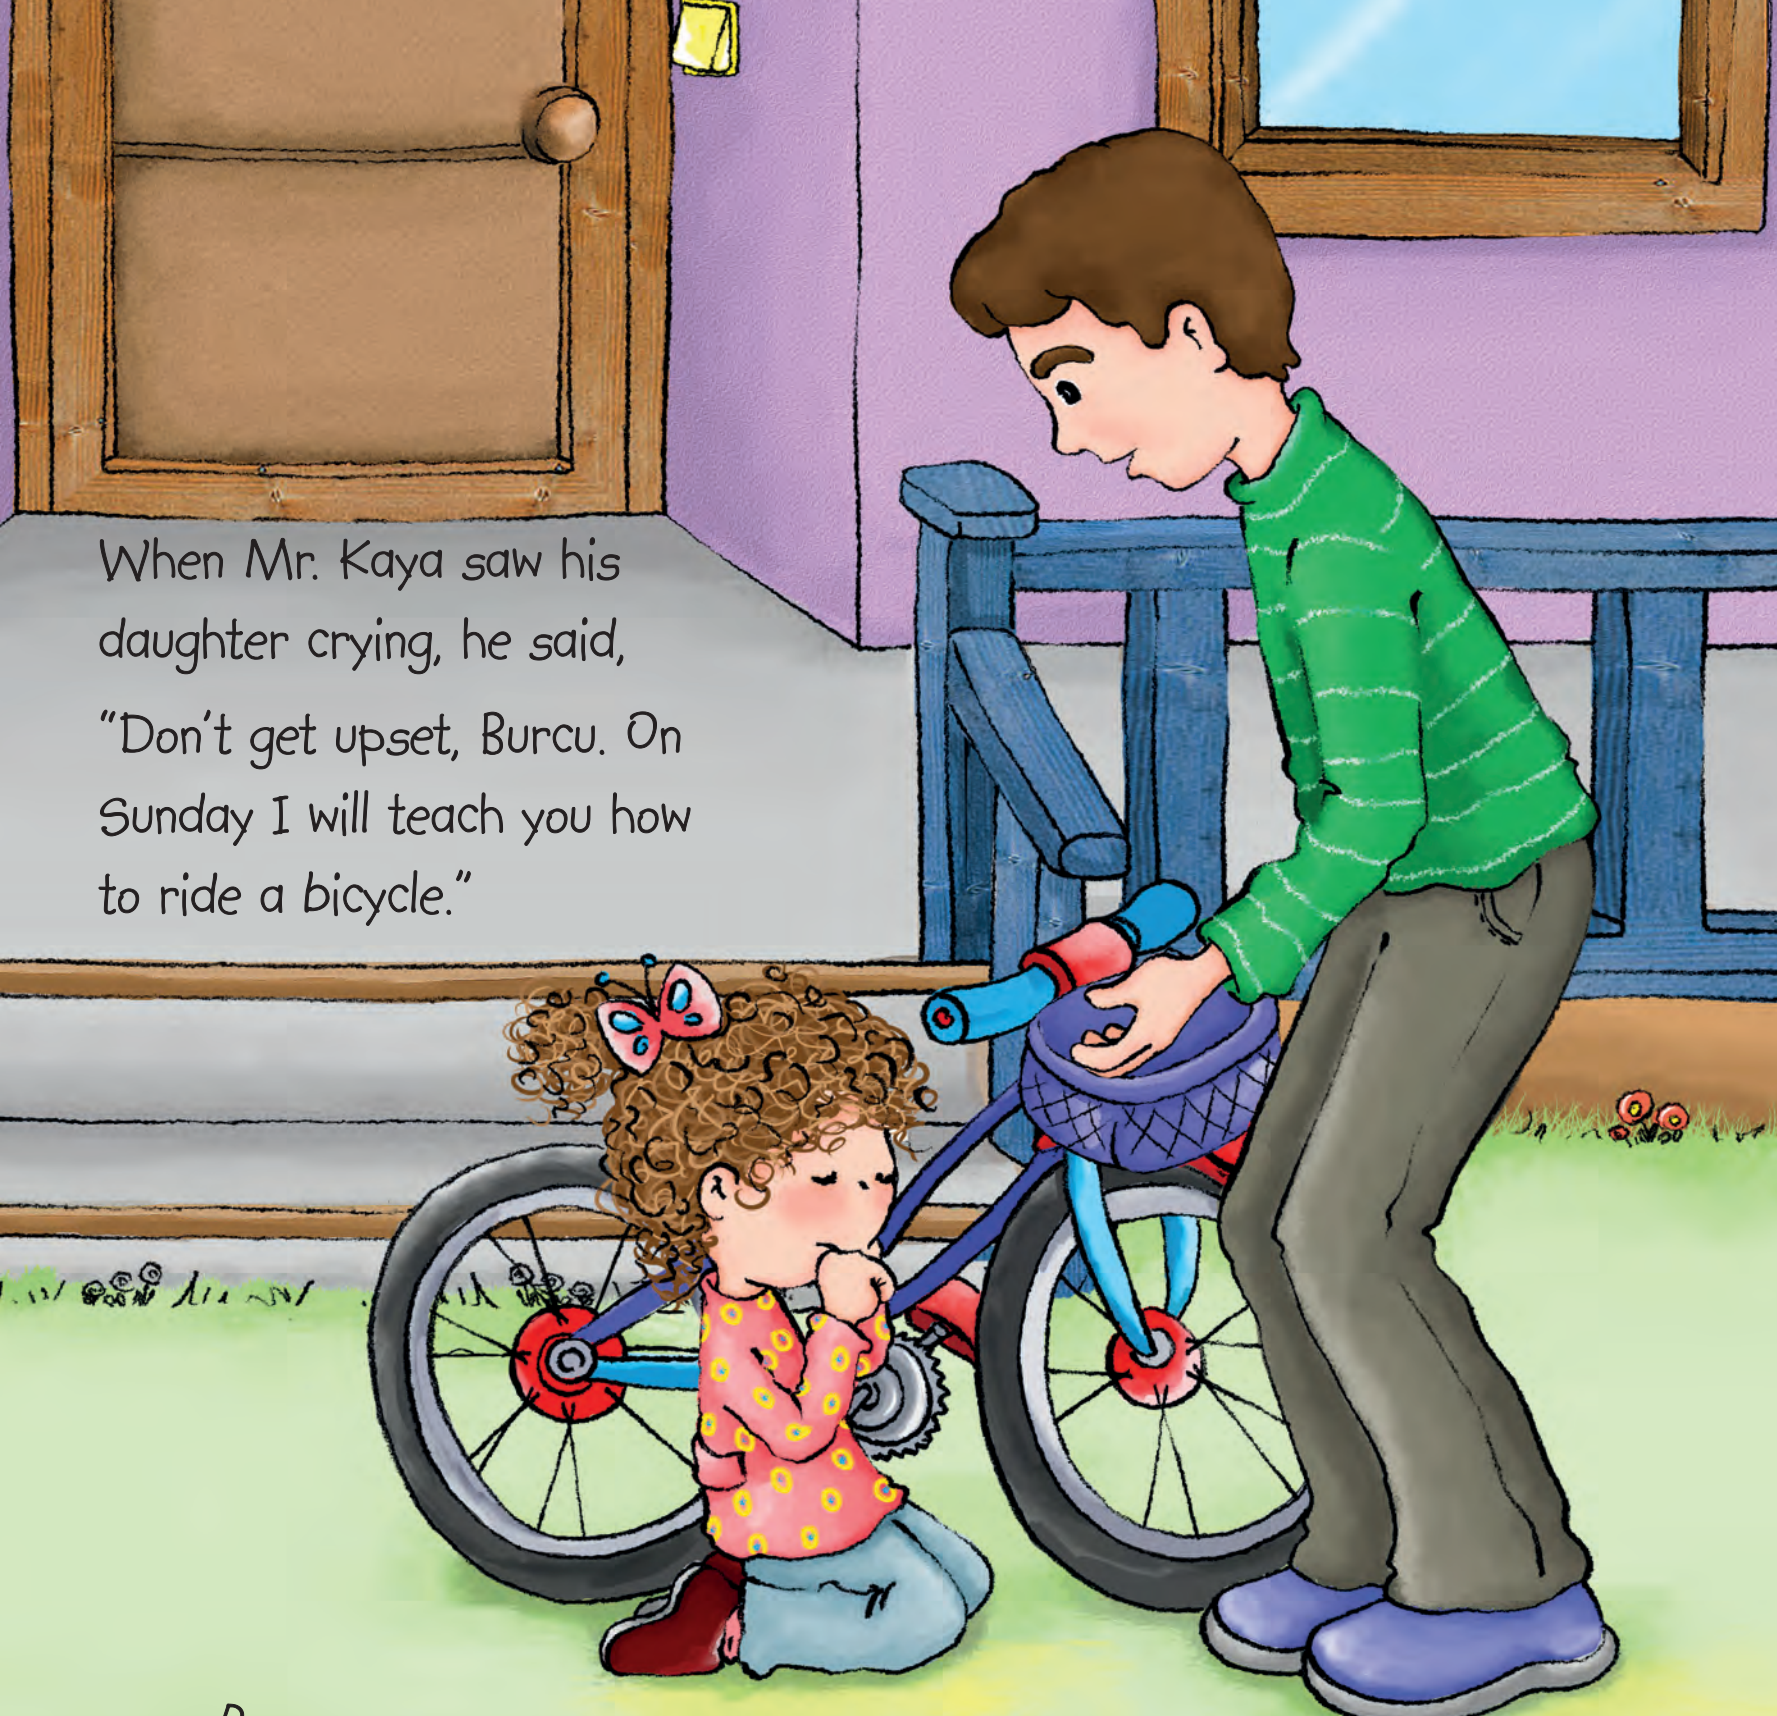

That day Alper was riding his bicycle quickly and calling out:

"Beep, beep, beeeep! Make way, here I come!"

Seeing him, Burcu also tried to ride her bicycle by herself but was not able to keep her balance at all. Suddenly she fell to the ground and started to cry.

When Mr. Kaya saw his daughter crying, he said,
"Don't get upset, Burcu. On Sunday I will teach you how to ride a bicycle."

Burcu was overjoyed.
"Hooray! Hooray! I will be able to ride Wind,"
she said, and began to wait excitedly for Sunday.

That morning Burcu jumped out of bed thinking, "Today is Sunday! Bicycle riding day!" She ran to her father's side.

"Daddy, let's go,"
she said.

Lowering the book he was reading, her father asked,

"Where are we going?"

"We will ride bikes of course. You didn't forget, did you?" Burcu asked with concern.

Her father laughed,

"I didn't forget sweetie, but today is Saturday. We will go ride bikes tomorrow."

Burcu laughed too. She was so excited to go ride her bike that she had mixed up the days.
